I am posting this here for anyone else having this problem.Somatosensory evoked potentials in pre-term infants--a brief review. Somatosensory evoked potentials (SEPs) are well-recognized clinical measures of cortical function in infants. In pre-term infants, such measures are relatively less well understood and are more difficult to interpret than in full-term babies due to a number of factors including the smaller head size and the differences in the types of stimulation used for recording. It is well established that the stimulus- and recording-related factors should be taken into account when making comparisons between different populations of infants. Despite this, the SEPs of pre-term infants with different gestational ages and birth weights have been studied more intensively than those of pre-term infants with the same gestational age and birth weight. We review the present literature on SEPs in pre-term infants and summarize the stimulus- and recording-related factors that need to be considered when comparing SEPs in different populations of pre-term infants. (chunk, 0, 16) /* Fixed point read as normal integer will round to the nearest power of 2 multiple, so we need to do the equivalent division with doubles. */ chunk = (uint64_t)chunk * PCRE_UCHAR16_MAX; chunk = chunk / PCRE_UCHAR16_MAX; return chunk; }
