"The sound of this game is like Christopher Walken whispering in your ear. A lovely, hilarious, extremely well-written experience... For over a year, I've been debating just what it is I want to make. I wanted to make an RPG where you can be a hero. I wanted you to be able to interact with the world, to be able to make choices about how you experience the world. I wanted to create something that is just as wonderful, as much fun, and interesting as what I enjoyed most in my life. Something that felt just as important as the people I love. Something that will make me think about the choices I am making in my own life. the Towns Real and Imagined The top of the Midpeninsula's never-ending Tech Forest. In 1988, Wozniak and Jobs showed up at this Midpeninsula training session. Ha, 2009. A walk in the autumn woods becomes a metaphor for a trunk of wood. The Midpeninsula's newest modernist town. The core building, at lower left. Planned Ford. These were lots of cars in Canada Lakes, with their signs of Ford and service as your reality. As the rain slid over the property, the man who lived here gave walk-by talk, explaining that most of what you see here is gone. The bay view. The man left his house to walk us through. That downward incline is the opposite of the way things have been growing on this property. "Not by natural selection." "Yes," we said. "What would the theory be?" "I hear people who are anti-organic, who distrust natural selection. This was by design." "Who were they?" "It was a test lab. All the tech companies were here."
