Clip managers are fairly easy to use - they'll show your clips in thumbnail format, stream your webcam, rotate a photo, and more. Most of them don't have a lot of options. If you find that they're missing key features, you have a few choices. You can try the third-party alternatives, you can dig into the source code, or you can just do it yourself! With a little programming experience, you should be able to create a really powerful camera manager for your computer. Today, we're going to take a look at such a tool in more detail. 1. BestCam To be honest, we were initially a bit disappointed by BestCam. This is not the first software to have this name, and our first impression was that BestCam is somehow lacking. When we click on the application icon, the first thing we see is a pop-up that asks us to subscribe and download more features. This is an upfront message, and we'd like to avoid installing a software that needs more that we have. We had a look at the software's options and found that it doesn't support webcam recording or image rotation. If those are important to you, you might want to look elsewhere. 3. Cheese Cheese is another popular webcam recorder, and it's likely to be familiar to most of our readers. We downloaded the trial version, and although it's not as feature-rich as BestCam, it's an easily-to-use program that's more than capable of fulfilling your needs. It's designed for webcam and video recording, but it also supports the capture of screenshots. We can even use it to make captions for our videos or screenshots! It's definitely the easiest webcam manager we've ever used. 4. VCam Perhaps you've used one of the many webcam-recording software applications you can find on the internet. VCam is nothing special, and it isn't likely to be the best choice for you. It's mostly designed to work with webcams, though, so that's what it does. You won't find any rotation tools or editing tools. We ended up just using VCam because we needed to be able to save screenshots. 5. Skype Screen Recorder At first, we were excited about the feature-rich Skype Screen Recorder, but when we installed it, we found that it doesn't support video recording. We had hoped that it would be okay to record videos from Skype and share them online, but
